Faith at the Olympics – by Paul Keenan

Gold and God together. The world needs its heroes. Over the course of these past weeks, that simple truth has been writ large in the champion athletes weighed down with the hopes of their respective nations as they strive to go further, faster, higher for the glory of gold.

No less vocal on the strength gained from belief in God is four-time winning swimmer Maya DiRado of Team USA. Importantly, though, the grounded DiRado also stresses that "as for my swimming career, my faith has helped me remember that there are so many more important things in life worth doing.

And when the talking is done, there is Christian example. Thus we have the 'Darling of the Games', 19-year-old Yusra Mardini of Syria and member of the Refugee team. Forced from her Damascus home by the shattering conflict there, Yusra became a hero long before Rio when she dived into the dark waters of the Mediterranean to drive her stricken refugee boat to shore, saving the lives of dozens of non-swimmers aboard. Today, entitled to boast of her gold medal in swimming, she instead told those jostling for a champion's narrative: "I want to continue swimming and I want to continue supporting refugees."
